CANNED FOODS.

When you heat canned foods empty them from the can and heat them in a double boiler. Heated in the can, even though put in water, there is often enough liquid in the can to cause enough steam for an explosion.

BOOKS FOR THE EVENING AT HOME.

When the wind whistles outside, when the grate fire burns merrily, there is nothing more enjoyable than a good book. At the Book Shop, 119 N. Michigan st., you may select any type of book that suits your fancy—fiction, travel, history, in fact any subject in which you are interested is covered by the books in our very complete stock. 359-17

HOLIDAY FLOWERS.

For your Christmas and New Year parties—for any holiday affair you should sprinkle the house with wreaths, ferns, potted plants, etc. Call Adam Beebler, Main 1999. 359-17

MADE A BIG HIT WITH FATHER.

There was rejoicing in one South Bend home Christmas morning when Dad discovered that the old watch he had given Mother to have repaired came back to him a new South Bend watch—with a purple ribbon. You see, she traded it in at a bargain. You can do the same. 359-17

Revelations of A Wife by ADELLE GARRISON

WHAT DICKY FELT IT NECESSARY TO ASK MADGE.

"Well, what do you want to know about that? What's eating his Nibs, anyway?"

This was Dicky's flippant comment as soon as the door had closed behind Dr. Pettit. But I knew that beneath his flippancy he was questioning the meaning of the physician's apology at parting.

As for myself, I was furious. Dr. Pettit was either crazy stupid, or he had permitted his offended dignity and his dislike for Dicky to betray him into a petty exhibition of bad taste. Whatever Dicky's pardon for bringing me home was the height of crude absurdity.

It was not the first time the physician had sounded this ridiculous note since my arrival at the Ticer farmhouse. I could not quite fathom his meaning, unless—my cheeks burned at the almost unavoidable inference—he was bent upon disabusing both my mind and Dicky's of any slightest vestige of the feeling which to my great embarrassment, he had shown only too plainly in former years, and which had been the cause of so much friction between my husband and myself.

Of course, I realized the reason behind his action. His infatuation for beautiful, witty Claire Foster was written in large characters all over him. But I had seen other men infatuated by banally ridiculous in the particular fashion Dr. Pettit had adopted.

A Quandary. I cast an apprehensive eye toward my mother-in-law's corner, and was relieved, indeed, to find that she had left the room. Dicky said my look, and grinned maliciously at me. I bit my lip savagely to keep back the quick, humiliating tears, for—if I read his glance aright—he, too, had fathomed Dr. Pettit's purpose.

My father rose abruptly, murmuring something about the moonlight outside, and left the room with his face carefully averted from mine. Had he, also, comprehended the inner meaning of the physician's words?

Dicky eyes me quizzically when we were left alone, save for Junior, sleeping in my arms.

"The doc isn't the most chivalrous lad in the world, is he, old dear?" he queried.

I was in a quandary what to answer. If I betrayed my pique and humiliation he might suspect I knew not what absurdity as to my feelings toward the physician. And if I were flippant off-hand he might imagine that I was heroically concealing my emotion. I busied myself for a minute in changing Junior's position before I decided to pretend ignorance of Dicky's meaning.

"—Tell Me Something."

"I'm sure I don't know what you mean," I said coldly.

"Oh, yes you do!" he gibed, and I saw that he was pedantically near anger. "Cuss him!" he exploded a second later. "The insufferable conceited!"

"Ma-ma, now sin' Dooner Boy." Junior's insistent little voice afforded me a providential escape.

"If you want to keep on talking about an absurd nincompoop, please find another audience," I said spiritedly, and with a touch of flippant unconcern. "But I'm going to sing to his blessed baby."

He waited long enough for it. Please ask mother to arrange Lilian's bed for me. I'll take Junior in there with me tonight, for he'll be restless."

He was on his feet in an instant. Junior's necessity patently driving every other thought from his mind. He dispatched his errand with alacrity, but had had smiled contentedly at my crooning, cuddled closer, and gone fast asleep. Luckily, his grandmother had prepared him for the night before I got home, and I knew that all I would have to do when I got him upstairs was to roll him out of his big, fuzzy bathrobe, his heart's delight, and take off the stockings and knitted slippers she had thoughtfully provided for him.

"Asleep?" Dicky's lips formed the words noiselessly. I nodded, and he held out his arms for the sleeping child. Long practice has made us perfect in the transfer of the little lad without waking him, and as I followed Dicky upstairs I saw that his ill humor, as well as my own, had been banished by the little ceremony.

Mother Graham began fussing over the child as soon as I brought him in. We had long ago fought out the battle as to which of us should keep him when he was ill, and she knew that it was useless to combat my decision to sleep with him. But I saw that she was anxious to pull off his little slippers and fuss around him as long as she could. So with a murmured word that I would be back in a minute I slipped out of the room in answer to a look from Dicky.

"Come downstairs a minute," he whispered, and when we had reached the shelter of the sitting room he put his arm around me and tilted my chin until my eyes met his.

"I was beastly about that pup," he said. "But, tell me something. It doesn't matter a bit to you how many kinds of an abnormal ass he makes of himself, does it?"

I think the emphasis of my answer satisfied him completely.

SCRAMBLED METAPHORS. A political speaker said that "the present government has sown a harvest which is coming home to roost."

Another said that "the floodgates of irreligion and intemperance are stalking through the land arm in arm."

A third said that "he (Mr. Balfour) is a mere figurehead with his hand on the rudder."

But to Bishop Knox we must award the prize. He said that Mr. McKenna's sword was an "over-loaded pistol which, being hung up in a tight corner lest it should burst, pretended to be dead until it got up and trotted home on the friendly back of the Bishop of St. Asaph."—Boston Transcript.

Bird Sings 'Yankee Doodle,' Draws Music World to Cage

SACRAMENTO, Calif., Dec. 25.—

"Yankee" is the only bird in the world that can whistle a tune through from beginning to end. It belongs to Mrs. Fred L. O'Brien of this city.

The bird is a roller canary. It whistles "Yankee Doodle" without missing a note.

At the age of three months, Mrs. O'Brien separated Yankee from her other birds, and started training him to whistle. She kept him in a semi-darkened room, and over an over again, she whistled "Yankee Doodle" for him. He started to learn almost at once. After 10 months' training, he had the tune letter perfect. He is now a year and a half old.

Yankee has set a world record, and bird men from every country have come to Sacramento to hear him perform. Mrs. O'Brien says bird specialists are the most incredulous over the stunt, until they actually hear it.

The bird will start without prompting, and if his audience shows appreciation, will whistle it over and over. If Mrs. O'Brien starts to whistle it he waits with head cocked, and when she stops, picks up the tune and finishes.

Mrs. O'Brien has twice been offered $1,000 for Yankee, by theater men. She has refused absolutely to part with him.

This year, Mrs. O'Brien has started to train some of Yankee's descendants to whistle. Five birds with whom she started several months ago have the tune all but a few bars. Twelve others, in training a shorter time, can whistle a few bars.

Mrs. O'Brien has 150 birds altogether and everyone of them has a name. Pedigree of all birds are kept. Mrs. O'Brien cares for them as if they were babies, and it is her infinite patience with them that has secured her marvelous results.
